Rashi in His Own Words

ויקרא כ"ג, ג': ששֶׁת יָמִים תַּעֲשֶׂה מְלָאכָה וּבַיּוֹם הַשְּׁבִיעִי שַׁבַּת שַׁבְּתוֹן מִקְרָא קֹדֶשׁ כָּל מְלָאכָה לֹא תַעֲשׂוּ שַׁבַּת הוּא לֵה' בְּכֹל מוֹשְׁבֵי תֵיכֶם:

רש"י ד"ה ששֶׁת יָמִים: מה ענין שבת אצל מועדות, ללמדך שכל המחלל את המועדות מעלין עליו כאלו חלל את השבתות. וכל המקיים את המועדות, מעלין עליו כאלו קיים את השבתות:

Vayikroh 23:3: (For) six days work may be performed, but on the seventh day, it is a complete rest day, a holy occasion; you may not perform any work. It is Shabbos to the Lord in all of your dwelling places.

Rashi Heading: (For) six days: Why does Shabbos appear here among the festivals? To teach you that one who violates the festivals is considered as if he had violated Shabbos, and one who keeps the festivals is regarded as having kept Shabbos.

Synopsis

This week's Torah portion, Emor, tells us about each festival¹. Immediately after discussing the festivals, the Torah pauses to teach us about Shabbos²; "(For) six days work may be performed, but on the seventh day, it is a complete rest day, a holy occasion; you may not perform any work. It is Shabbos to Hashem in all of your dwelling places." We know that Rashi is particular about each word he uses, including those that serve as the headings for his comments. Here, he is bothered that the commandment to rest on Shabbos is placed alongside the commandments regarding keeping the festivals. He clarifies this by asking, "Why does Shabbos appear here among the festivals³?" This being the case, we must understand why the heading of his comments is "for six days?" His problem is not with the mention of the six weekdays, but with the day of Shabbos! Rashi often follows the words he cites from the verse with "etc." (וגו' in Hebrew) to allude to the end of the verse. However, here, he does no such thing.

THE RASHI OF THE WEEK

Additionally, we need to understand why Rashi begins with the negative, "whoever desecrates the festivals is considered as if he had desecrated Shabbos," rather than the positive, "whoever fulfills the festivals is considered as if he has fulfilled Shabbos."

Peshat is the method by which Rashi explains the Torah. According to Peshat, the fact that Shabbos appears among the festivals is not such a substantial question. As other commentaries say, we can include Shabbos with the holidays, even though it is not one of the "appointed holy days we designate⁴." Nonetheless, we still need to mention it together with the holidays to highlight the differences between Shabbos and the festivals. Rashi's problem is why the Torah needs to tell us that "for six days, work may be done." The Torah only requires the mention of Shabbos here, not the six weekdays. Rashi explains this by comparing the severity of performing labor on a festival to the seriousness of working on Shabbos.

When the Torah says that "(for) six days labor may be performed," it does not use the word "six" as an adjective, i.e., the number of days during which work may be performed. Instead, as Rashi explains in other places throughout the Torah, "six - ששת" is a noun, a unit of time. Rashi explains that the Torah designates two distinct units of time. One measure of time is a weekday, during which one may perform labor. The other is Shabbos and festivals during which one may not work. That explains why Rashi cites only the words from the verse, "(for) six days." That is his point that a six-day workweek is one unit of time. That also explains why Rashi begins with the negative. "Whoever desecrates the festivals is considered as if he had desecrated Shabbos." He explains that Shabbos and festivals are units of time during which one may not perform work.

Rashi's Explanation

This week's Torah portion, Emor, discusses each festival. Immediately after introducing the discussion of the festivals, the Torah discusses Shabbos. "(For) six days work may be performed, but on the seventh day, it is a complete rest day, a שבת שבתון (a holy occasion) during which you may not perform any work. It is Shabbos to the Lord in all of your dwelling places." The fact that, after introducing the laws of the festivals, the Torah interrupts with the commandment to rest on Shabbos seems to bother Rashi. He clarifies this by asking⁵, "Why does Shabbos appear here among the festivals?"

5. As a rule, Rashi does not ask questions; he provides answers which explain potential difficulties.

THE RASHI OF THE WEEK

Difficulties in Understanding Rashi

We know that Rashi is particular about all the words he uses, including those that serve as the heading of his comments. Why is the header of his comments "for six days?" His problem is not regarding the mention of the six weekdays. The addition of the day of Shabbos after introducing the festivals bothers him!

Rashi often follows the words he cites from the verse with "etc." (וגו' in Hebrew) to allude to the end of the verse. If he did so here, it would include the words "seventh day." However, here, he does no such thing.

There are exceptions to this rule. Rashi sometimes cites the first few words of a verse without writing, "etc.. Nonetheless, he explains the entire topic. For example, when describing the Ephod, one of the priestly garments, the Torah says,⁶ "and they shall make the Ephod of gold, blue, purple, and crimson wool, and twisted fine linen, the work of a master weaver." Rashi cites the words, "and they shall make the ephod," and explains that "If I tried to explain the making of the Ephod and the Choshen according to the order of the verses, their explanation would be fragmentary and the reader would make a mistake in combining them. Therefore, I am writing first how they were made, as it was in its entirety so that the reader will be able to run through it quickly ..." We see that even though Rashi is explaining the entire process of the Ephod, he only cites the words, "and they shall make the Ephod," without even writing, "etc. - וגו'." However, that only applies when the first words of the verse contain at least a part of the entire content Rashi explains. That is not the case with Rashi's comments here.

We also need to understand why Rashi begins with the negative, "whoever desecrates the festivals is considered as if he had desecrated Shabbos," rather than the positive, "whoever fulfills the festivals is considered as if he has fulfilled Shabbos."

The Explanation

It may be possible to explain the mention of Shabbos in the following manner. The Torah tells us we may not be more lenient regarding a holiday than we are regarding Shabbos. There is a fundamental difference between Shabbos and festivals. Hashem created the world in six days, and on the seventh day, He rested (so to speak). Therefore, we must keep Shabbos. Since then, there has been an ongoing cycle of six weekdays followed by Shabbos. In other words, Hashem Himself sanctified the Shabbos.

6. See Parshas Tetzaveh, Shemos 28:6 and Rashi's comments there.

THE RASHI OF THE WEEK

On the other hand, the festivals are blessed by the Jewish nation, meaning by the Sages. The Torah tells us when each festival occurs in the Hebrew month. The Sages decide the day the month begins, specifically the Supreme Jewish Court in Jerusalem, called the Sanhedrin⁷. The Torah mentions Shabbos to teach us that although G-d sanctifies it, and man sanctifies the festivals, we must be equally careful regarding both.

However, this answer does not suffice. When the Torah compares Shabbos to the holidays, it does not speak of desecrating, but rather of observing both. This shows us that it does not imply any leniency regarding festivals.

Instead, the explanation is as follows. When the Torah says that "(for) six days labor may be performed," it does not use the word "six" as an adjective, the number of days during which work may not be performed. Instead, as Rashi explains in many other places throughout the Torah, "six - שש" is a noun, a unit of time. Rashi gives a similar explanation several verses further.⁷ The Torah writes, "And you shall bring a fire offering to the Lord for seven days (שבעת ימים)" Rashi cites the words "for seven days" and explains that "(The Hebrew is שבעת ימים lit., a "seven" of days.) Wherever the שבעת appears, it denotes a noun, and (thus, the expression here שבעת ימים means) "a week of days"; septaine in Old French (which is the noun, as opposed to sept, meaning the number seven). Likewise, every construct expression like) שלשת, חמשת, ששית, שמונת (literally means, respectively, "an eight of," "a six of," "a five of," "a three of," (meaning a unit consisting of one of these numbers)⁸.

Rashi explains that the Torah designates two distinct units of time. One unit of time is a weekday, during which one may perform labor; the other is Shabbos and festivals, during which one may not perform work. That explains why Rashi only cites "(for) six days." His very point is that a six-day workweek is one unit of time. That also answers why Rashi begins with the negative, "whoever desecrates the festivals is considered as if he had desecrated Shabbos." He explains that Shabbos and festivals are periods of time during which one may not perform work, unlike on a weekday when one may labor.

A Deeper Explanation from Rashi

The Sages tell us in the Midrash that "six days you shall work" is a positive commandment. This means not only that one may work on weekdays, but also that it is a mitzvah to perform work.

7. See Rambam Laws of the Sanctification of the New Moon. "The sanctification of the new month has been entrusted to the Sanhedrin. The new month does not begin until it has been sanctified by the court, and the day that they establish as Rosh Chodesh is Rosh Chodesh."

8. See our Parshah, Vayikroh 23:8 and Rashi's commentary.

THE RASHI OF THE WEEK

This follows the teaching that "Hashem should bless you in all that you do," meaning that you must do something, i.e., work, to provide a vessel to hold G-d's blessing.

However, all of this is regarding the body. The physical body in which Hashem clothes the G-dly soul conceals the Divine manifestation within the world. This is why the laws of nature, with which G-d created the world, must be followed. However, when the Divine soul is revealed on Shabbos and holidays, these laws do not apply.

Since the G-dly soul is higher than the body, its revelation on the holy days influences the body. The soul can elevate the body and transcend its natural limits despite the physical body's limitations. The soul will remove the body from exile, and we will merit the actual redemption through our righteous Moshiach.
